

ABSTRACT

A furnace brazing process for metal parts of which at least one part is tubular, includes positioning of the filler metal, preferably as a pre-formed member inside said tubular part, and successive reheating inside the furnace to induce the melting of the filler metal and the accomplishment of the joint. The process is particularly suited to the construction of towel-rack type radiators

x222\206383.app